Progressive supranuclear palsy (PSP) is a parkinsonian syndrome with an onset between the fifth and seventh decades of life and a mean disease duration of 2.5 to 4.5 years. The clinical presentation of PSP includes a mixture of parkinsonism, vertical gaze palsy, rigidity, and ataxia. Pathologic examination of fixed tissues reveals abundant inclusions of the neurofilament protein, phosphorylated tau, and ubiquitin in the cell bodies and proximal dendrites of the striatal neurons. To date, calbindin (CALB) has been identified as a selective presynaptic marker of striatal neurons in rat and human brain. In a case of PSP with severe cognitive impairment, we immunohistochemically examined the expression of CALB in the brain. The results showed that the striatal neurons in the caudate nucleus and the globus pallidus had immunopositive staining for CALB. These findings suggest that the striatal neurons may be involved in the selective vulnerability of PSP. We are a construction management company, where the customer is at the center of all we do.
